ABSTRACT

This dictionary of collocations was compiled by an English-as-a-Second-Language (ESL) teacher in Saudi Arabia who teaches adult, native speakers of Arabic. The dictionary is practical in teaching English because it helps to focus on everyday events and situations. The dictionary works as follows: the teacher looks up a word, such as "talk"; next to the word is a list of words associated with that word, such as "peace, pep, pillow, shop, trash, heart-to-heart, man-to-man, and small"; the teacher explains the more interesting uses of the word. The teacher then asks for other possible uses and contexts for the word. The introduction makes many suggestions for the creative and productive use of this dictionary. (KFT)

INTRODUCTION

I compiled the bulk of this list in my free time during the year I taught English to officers of the Saudi Arabian National Guard and lived at Camp Vinnell, north of Riyadh, between King Fahd Stadium and Janidriyah. I compiled it for pleasure, and because it was of great practical help to me in the classroom. It's real value, however, may be in holding up authentic English--as opposed to the contrived, trivial book English we so often find ourselves teaching--as the battle flag we carry into our classrooms each working day.

How I use this compilation to help me teach vocabulary in the classroom

My advice for any teacher wishing to use this list to help him or her teach vocabulary is quite simple.

1. Look up the word you're teaching on this list.
2. Teach any collocations that seems useful.

Let's say it's Day W, Period X, Book Y, Lesson Z, and I'm introducing talk (noun). Of course, I can say something like, "talk, you already know the verb, this is the noun." And, of course, the text introduces the word in some manner, and may even recycle it once or twice later. I can have a student who already knows what the word means give the Arabic translation to his classmates. That's fast and easy for a word that isn't considered a problem, and keeps me on schedule, but is it enough? I don't think so. It's up to me to make the word vivid and to get my students to use and remember it. First I'll look up talk in this list and select some modifiers I suspect my Saudi military students will be interested in. I'll write them on the board in the following format:

peace
pep pillow ransom shop trash talk(s)

heart-to-heart man-to-man

Thereafter, I'll take a few minutes to talk to my students about the collocations, explaining and using them, asking questions, and answering theirs. In Saudi Arabia, I know my students will understand and like the idea of a heart-to-heart talk, be titillated by the idea of pillow talk, and perhaps be slightly uncomfortable with the idea of a man-to-man talk, as rank is very important to them and directness can be unpleasant and impolite. Trash talk will delight them, as they enjoy bantering.

I'll then ask my students if they can think of any collocations I haven't included and praise them lavishly for their contributions. At this point, I almost always see students scribbling the collocations down in the margins of their books or in their notebooks, unbidden.

Of course, a simple list like this does not do everything a good vocabulary teacher should do. If I am teaching talk, I will also write the frame have a talk with sombody about something on the board and try to elicit sentences from my students like, "I had a talk with my father last night about money." While have is often the verb for talk, I would be remiss if I didn't point out that for pep talk the verb would probably be give or receive, and for small talk it would be make.

I will also point out to my students that talk fits the "event" frame for words with duration and try to elicit from them sentences using start, finish, last and during like the following:

The peace talks started on Monday
The peace talks ended on Wednesday
The peace talks lasted (for) two days
During the talks, they talked about the future of Jerusalem.

Or let's say I'm responsible for teaching eye. I can point to my eye and say the word and ask how many eyes I have, and what color they are. I like to do more. In Saudi Arabia and many other countries, there are people who believe in or have heard of people possessing the evil eye, and that is something we can talk about. My students will understand the expression, "turn a blind eye towards something." I will praise the Bedouin for their eagle eyes, which will please many, as the eagle is highly regarded in their culture, although comparing a person to an animal is always problematic. "The Bedouin sees everything and forgets nothing," I will say, and this always elicits approval. "Her eyes are like the moon on the 15th of the month," is a stock phrase from Arabic poetry. One carried-away student, wishing to add a simile, astonished me by saying, "She has eyes like a cow!" He was crestfallen when I told he would get slapped if he ever said that to a Western woman. Of course, he was referring to eye color and size. Some things just don't translate well.

Next, consider a word like English. Again, I'll teach this word in the usual way and say, "English is a language." But English is also a productive modifier. In fact, it is as a modifier that the word most often occurs in out text. When I teach the word, I quickly write it on the board in the following format:

	lesson test
English	course class school language

Again, I will talk with my students, explaining and using these words, asking questions and answering theirs, and ask them if they can think of any words to include on the list and praise them lavishly for their contributions.

Words for school subjects introduced in the same lesson follow the same pattern, so I can make listening completion sentences like the following:

(T) Mr. Stockdale isn't a math teacher. He's an *
(Ss) English teacher!
(T) This isn't a math course. This is an *
(Ss) English course!
(T) On Wednesday, last period, we don't have a math test. We have an *
(Ss) English test!

Listening-completion sentences are great, of course, because listening is an important skill my students will need for the listening-comprehension portion of their tests.

Finally, consider a word like rainproof. Again, the book introduces the word and provides a simple definition and minimal context. Unfortunately, the book does not provide further examples of words with the suffix proof. No worries. This compilation provides plenty.

bulletproof
bombproof childproof crashproof cycleproof escape-proof fireproof flat-proof foolproof moisture-proof rainproof shatterproof soundproof stab-proof thornproof waterproof weatherproof

Again, all I do is to select a few examples from the list, write them on the board, explain and use the words, ask and answer questions, and invite the students to add to the list. Saudi Arabian military men are naturally interested in bulletproof, bombproof and shatterproof, and stab-proof might raise a question. Prison guards wear stab-proof vests during cell extractions, which are often videotaped.

Providing content for short talks on subjects I don't know much about or for experiences I've not had or forgotten

People naturally have varying interests. I can talk animatedly to anyone for hours about my favorite sport, kayaking, or my favorite place, Graham County in Western North Carolina, but if I had to give a short talk about outer space, I might be at a loss. This compilation helps. Referring to the entries for space (outer), space shuttle and space station gives me things to talk about that I might not otherwise have thought of. Like the problem of space sickness, for instance. Or space junk.

Just as people have varying interests, so too have they had varying experiences. Not all teachers, for example, have been married. Again, this list can help. By glancing at the collocations with marriage and wedding, a single teacher should be able to talk easily and comprehensively about the experience. To take another example, few teachers have ever been to prison. A look at the list of collocations for prison, however, will no doubt activate much knowledge from films and books. What strikes me, looking at the list, is how a prison is a microcosm of the world at large. For example, there's a prison doctor and prison gym and hospital and even a prison band! Looking at the list, I also see there are different kinds of prison with different levels of security and different populations of people. Of course, prisons may be quite different in other countries, and this will come out as the students talk about prisons.

Also, people can simply forget experiences they've had, particularly if the experience occurred long ago. I've reached the age when I simply don't remember much of high school, for example. Looking over the list of collocations for school and high school, I remember that I never had much high-school spirit, don't remember what our school colors were, and had totally forgotten that I not only ate but scrubbed pots and pans at our high school cafeteria. I do remember our high-school gym, with its gleaming waxed floor, bleachers that folded into the wall, and its trophy case. But then, I'm a Hoosier. Thankfully, one dismal collocation had not yet entered the language when I attended school: school massacre. Who can forget Columbine? I'll never forget sitting in a little park next to the Tukaseegee River in Bryson City and reading about it in the newspaper. Where were you when you heard about it?

For me, introducing new vocabulary is a wonderful opportunity not merely to teach, but to learn from my students. When I introduce village here in Saudi Arabia, I know I will hear from men who actually come from villages. I will ask students if their village has a village well, or if a particular person is known as the village gossip! When the students understand that I am really interested in village life, they open up and contribute to the list.

Speaking of villages reminds me of the time I stopped in Rumah, a village north of Riyadh. While looking down one of the great grated village wells on the edge of a sand-filled, bone-dry riverbed, I was startled by the small birds that came flying up out of its cool dark depths.

What we teach versus what we don't teach

When I use this compilation to help me prepare for daily lessons, I am always struck by how interesting real language is. Take the words capital and country. Like most teachers, I automatically think of capital in terms of statements like "Riyadh is the capital of Saudi Arabia" and questions like, "What is the capital of Morocco?" Referring to this list, however, I see that "capital" is commonly used in a booster-ish, chamber-of-commerce sort of way--Franklin, North Carolina, the Gem and Mineral Capital of the World!--or to rate a city in some category, usually negative--the murder capital of the U.S., the terrorism capital of the Arab World, etc.. Just the other day, I heard a couple teachers talking about places in California, and one teacher mentioned that such-and-such a city billed itself as the garlic capital of the world. You probably know its name. It's the same with country. I'm so used to teaching statements like "Saudi Arabia and the United States are countries" that I forget we can also talk about bear country, wine country, wheat country or cattle country.

Or consider signature. We generally think of signature as the unique way a person signs his name on a piece of paper, but a glance at the collocations for that word shows us that a missile can have a signature, too. Of course, you wouldn't ask a missile for its autograph! When we think of balloons, we usually thing of the ones that float in the air, but you can also insert one in a vein. We generally think of parents and cousins in terms of kinship, but what about a chemical cousin or a parent company? Who in this area of the world can forget the mother of all wars?

If a student asked you out of the blue what history meant, how would you define the word? "Well, history is what happened before, in the past…I believe the Arabic for it is…" When we think of the word, we usually think of world history, to include ancient history. But we can use the word to talk about things that are much closer to home and more personal, like family history. The doctor will be most interested in my medical history, the court in any history of violence I may have, and a creditor in my payment or earnings history. These collocations don't naturally spring to mind, though they seem perfectly natural when we hear them or encounter them in speech or in a text. This list provides plenty of them for instant access.

As I suggested above, when I talked about prison, collocations like the ones found on this list allow me to give an expanded analysis of words that my students ask me about, or that occur in a text, but only in a single context. For example, let's say a student asks me about the word guy. I'd probably say, "Well, a guy is a man…it's just another word for man. It's generally used by younger people." After a quick examination of collocations on this list, however, I can tell my students more: people who do jobs for us and whom we don't really know are often referred to as guy: delivery guy and by analogy, "the guy who cleans / delivers / picks up / paints etc. Or guy is used by young women to refer to their boyfriends: my guy, "I gotta great guy," etc. Or guy can be used with an adjective to describe a person socially: he's a wild and crazy guy, a fun guy, a creepy guy, or as an archetype: he's a mean guy, cruel guy, smart guy, good guy, bad guy, etc.

Examining collocations from this list, I realize that I often neglect the animal world for the human, and vice versa. For example, a census is usually thought of in terms of people, but you can also take a census of moths and butterflies. Don't ask me how a moth or butterfly can fill out a form! Most people think of community in terms of people, but we can also speak of communities of plants and animals. In our texts population usually refers to people, but it is also used to refer to animals. On the other hand, I am accustomed to teaching egg in reference to chickens, in spite of the fact people throughout the world are intensely interested in the latest advancements in human fertility and reproduction.

I also can't help but noticing the continuing usefulness of words and collocations relating to the natural world and to more-traditional ways of life that are still used to express modern concepts, such as brand, path, and footprint, etc. Students who brand camels, walk paths and study the footprints to see who has been along before them don't have any problem with collocations like brand name, career path or the concept expressed in a sentence like, "The battalion leaves a big footprint." In fact, those students probably find those sorts of collocations more expressive and satisfying than the native speaker who has lost their original meaning. In our curriculum we teach kid in the sense of child, but I always enjoy pointing out that the word can also refer to a baby goat. My students from rural and agricultural backgrounds always find the ambiguity of "the kids are playing outside" interesting and amusing. And, more importantly, familiar.

Likewise, collocations referring to myths, legends, superstition and childhood still persist: last night's soccer match was an epic game! The continuing saga of… Of course, none of our adult students believe in giants, giants are from childhood storybooks! And yet, we can refer to Coca-Cola as the beverage giant, and eBay as an online auction giant. We can refer to a game show's monster ratings… An educated adult would probably scoff at the idea of ghosts inhabiting a ghost town. And yet, is there anyone, from any culture, who hasn't looked out across the desert or sea at night, or looked up at the stars, and not wondered about the mysterious lights they saw? The word ghoul, by the way, comes from the Arabic. Algol, the eclipsing binary in the Perseus Constellation which increases and decreases in brightness over a period of time, thus seeming to wink, means, "The Ghoul." Don't be alarmed, but it wheels overhead at some time on most nights.

Teaching collocations can mean the difference between a student merely learning a vocabulary item (usually in translation) and actively using the word in normal speech. Consider direction. In the curriculum I teach, that word is introduced in the exemplary phrase, "North, south, east and west are directions." Like the other teachers in my school, I turn my back to the students, face the blackboard, and point to the ceiling. "What direction is this," I shout. "North!" the students roar. I point down, I point to my right, I point to my left, I flap my arms as though I am waving planes off the deck of an aircraft carrier as the students shout directions. While it is important that students know the names of the four cardinal directions, it is just as important that they know the main collocating adjectives for direction, which would be…you guessed it, the right direction (versus the wrong direction). By the way, I wouldn't embark on an off-road trip in the desert without at least two trucks equipped with GPS receivers and companions who possessed a good sense of direction! My point is, when we teach direction, we should teach collocations like this direction, that direction, the right direction, the wrong direction and sense of direction. At a minimum, I would want a student to be able to say, "This is the wrong direction."

Life and language change, which is a real complication for a teacher such as myself, who, for a number of years now, has been aging two days for every one spent in the classroom. In the past, when I taught address, I would mention the street address, street number, city, state, zip, etc. Nowadays, I must remember to teach e-mail address. A reference to an engine nowadays is as likely to refer to a search engine (computers) as to something dirty that you can lose a finger in if you're not careful. When I teach window, I must remember to mention Windows, as a computer-savvy student slyly reminded me one day. Teachers who look up words on this list before teaching them will often be surprised by the collocations they find. They are all natural and often high frequency and aren't mentioned simply because whoever created the text didn't consider them.

Students always seem to sense when language is natural, as opposed to the contrived and trivial language they get fed from their text. I have seen students poring over the English on candy-bar wrappers, soft-drink cans and the even the tags on clothing! They perk up when I give them good, natural collocations, and, unbidden, write them down. I think it is because natural language reflects the world, and learners are interested in the world, not just the book, even though we all understand it is our common goal to get through the quizzes and tests successfully, so we can keep our administrators happy.

Vocabulary versus grammar, lists and sets

Most curriculums spend far too much time on grammar at the expense of vocabulary. Consider need (verb) and need (noun), for example. In my curriculum, both words are introduced in the same unit, but the verb is highlighted and the pattern need + to + verb is stressed. The curriculum makes the students create an endless series of sentences like "I need to buy a toothbrush," "I need to go to the store," etc. with the emphasis on putting "to" before the verb. Every once in a while I find myself reminding my students that need is also a noun, and writing "wants, needs, desires" on the board. Every person has needs, there are basic human needs, and these needs are worth discussing! Look up want and need and needed in this compilation and you will find collocations of real value and interest to talk about with your students.

Best is another good example of a word that is introduced as grammar (irregular superlative) but is more meaningfully taught as a vocabulary item. In the curriculum I teach, the students must produce endless sentences like, "Ali's score was good, Sami's score was better, but Fahad's score was the best." Students don't seem to be interested in the lesson until I write "my best friend" on the board, and we start talking about our best friends, as opposed to…you guessed it! Our worst enemies! In Saudi Arabia, I enjoy mentioning the saying, "A man's best friend is his dog." This literally flabbergasts my students who have grown up in a culture with completely different attitudes towards animals and pets and where comparing a person to an animal of any sort can be a deadly insult. And this reminds me of a story.

I once had a student, small of stature, who was hitting his larger friend, and the situation seemed about to get out of hand. "You're feisty," I told him, to gain his attention. When he asked me what feisty meant, I told him to look it up in the big English-Arabic dictionary in the Warrant Officer's room, thus separating him and the other young man. I was quite pleased with myself over how I had handled a potentially disruptive situation until the student and the Warrant Officer both paid me a visit. Unfortunately, the dictionary they had consulted, printed in an Arab country, had no entry for feisty, but did list the noun. You don't know what a feist is? Neither did I, nor did I feel very good, as a teacher and native speaker, having to admit ignorance of my own language in order to keep my job!

Just the other day, I had to teach ordinal numbers, first one to twelve, and then, after a few pages, from twelve up to 100. The students glumly accepted it as their lot, as did I. For practice, they had to read a list of random dates. We were soon through it and on to other things. It was only later that I consulted this work, to see what we might have talked about for first. Among other things, I found: first car, first child, first date, and first name. Of course, it would not be culturally appropriate to talk about a first date in Saudi Arabia; on the other hand, a man here can take a second wife! In many other countries students, thought, learners would seize on frames such as: my first date was with… on my first date we… I have witnessed taciturn guys turn oratorical given the chance to talk about their first car. By the way, do you know the names of the months that are also used as first names?

Or take a set like the names of the months. Here in Saudi Arabia, Ramadan is the name of the month during which Muslims neither eat nor drink all day long. I used to feel sorry for my students during this time, particularly when the month occurred during the blazingly hot summer, until they told me about how much they enjoyed Ramadan nights, when they stay up at night, eating, drinking and socializing with family and friends. That is a collocation that, along with its associations, is now indelibly impressed into my mind. As I said, my students taught it to me, and I thank them for it. Ramadan nights…

Many collocations are arbitrary

The way words collocate with other words often distinguishes words that otherwise might be considered synonyms. In the curriculum that I teach, for example, earth and world are presented as synonyms. And yet we don't say, "the largest mosque in the earth" or "the largest airport on world." Nor do we talk about the horrors of "Earth War II," the death toll from the latest "worldquake" in Japan, or how the Saudi Arabian soccer team might do at the next "Earth Cup!" On the other hand, we can (but too often don't) speak about the Muslim world or the world under the sea (or, as an excited student once shouted out in class: "Sea World!"). This list provides a selection of collocations for both earth and world and other words, like land and ground and guy and individual, that have similar meanings but occur with different sets of collocations.

A response to commonly voiced criticisms

Some teachers disparage lists, especially the lists of unrelated single words the students often carry about in their pockets and pore over in class before major tests, instead of paying attention to the lesson at hand. "Students have got to learn how to figure words out from context," those teachers say. "They've got to learn how to use a dictionary. It's not important that they understand every word, anyway. Besides, what are they going to do when there isn't a teacher there to help? What's a list for, anyway? The best way to forget a word is to write it down."

It is certainly not my intention to give my students a list of unrelated words and then tell them to memorize them while I sit at my desk, drink coffee and compose an e-mail to a friend back home! As I have explained above, I use these lists to help me teach vocabulary, to make vocabulary vivid, to provide common collocations that are neglected by the text and that I might not otherwise be able to recall in the stress of the day, to expand my students' vocabularies, and to use the language to talk about things that relate to our lives. While this list concretely helps me prepare for teaching vocabulary, I still have to teach grammar and do the million and one other things a teacher does in the ordinary course of a day, including trying to make my supervisor happy. And, of course, I must stay on schedule.

Some teachers say it is wrong to "waste class time" on a vocabulary word that is introduced later, or isn't even in the curriculum. Let's say the book introduces hide (verb), and I mention that hide and seek is a children's game. Some teachers will object that seek is not in the curriculum. To them all I can say is, it can be explained quickly (look for, try to find). In fact, it seems stupid to teach hide without relating it to look for and find, no matter what the curriculum does. In my experience, students don't find a collocation like hide and seek burdensome, they find it interesting. While it is true that a collocation might include a new vocabulary item which may or may not be introduced later in the curriculum, it is just as likely that the collocation will reinforce a previously learned vocabulary item. Besides, the teacher can select which collocations she or he chooses to writes on the board. Is hide and seek childish? Yes, but a heat-seeking missile sure isn't.

Some teachers say, "Noticing collocations in context is more important than listing them." To this I heartily and completely agree, but how do we get students to notice collocations in the first place? A good way is by the procedure outlined from the very start of this introduction. By listing and calling attention to collocations, we get students to start noticing what comes before and after words. Students presented with collocations in this manner will have no problem organizing words into the kind of notebook Michael Lewis advocates in his book, Implementing the Lexical Approach, Putting Theory into Practice (LTP, 1997). In effect, this list provides content for his collocation boxes.

What is context, really? This is an important question. Do our texts, with their watered-down unauthentic texts and oftentimes-trivial dialogues, really provide context?

I don't think so. I believe context is the sum total of our freely shared knowledge, wisdom and experiences brought to bear on the matter at hand, whether it's trying to operate or fix a piece of equipment or learn a language. That's what a class is. It's always easy to identify the burnt-out teachers in any particular school. They're the ones who, for whatever reason, have stopped sharing and stay strictly inside the book instead of trying to relate the material to their lives, and the lives of their students.

Context provided by exemplary phrase

Good exemplary phrases are treasures that make talking about a word easy and natural. If you look up neutralization in this list, you will find "neutralization or removal of land mines." This is a good exemplary phrase, as a land mine is clearly negative in value, by neutralizing it we prevent it from working (exploding and maiming or killing someone), and to neutralize it we do not necessarily need to remove it. Or take the word portable. In this list, you will find the sentence, "the IMP portable mine detector weights 7 kilograms." This is a good because it reinforces the idea that portability depends on weight, and that weight can be expressed in kilograms. The exemplary phrase for bartender is simply "bouncers, bartenders, cocktail waitresses." This is good, as it places "bartender" with the people she or he usually works with. For crawl, you will find the phrase, "crawl, walk, run sequence (military instruction)." This is particularly nice, as it includes a series. Have you heard of such a phrase in respect to instruction? I hadn't.

As I compiled this list, I developed a real appreciation for good useful exemplary phrases. Unfortunately, not all suggest a dramatic scene like the following:

a fraternity member shoots a pledge at a keg party (fraternity) or are as curious as this one:

women in Chicago require bigger bra sizes (bra) or just downright startling:

the Irish are sex-obsessed (obsessed)

To my mind, a superior exemplary phrase might do one of six things:

First, it might provide a teacher or student with a high-frequency collocating verb. If you look up argument in this list, you will find exemplary phrases or sentences that contain such verbs as support, deliver and make. For computer skills, you will find develop, improve, require and learn. We all know that we must teach collocating verbs for nouns, or our students will not be able to use the nouns in speech. Remember direction? If you don't tie that noun with a verb, a person can't say, "We're going in the wrong direction."

Second, an exemplary phrase might provide a variety of modifiers (adjectives, nouns, complex modifiers), not for complexity's sake, but simply to show students that complex modifiers, like the familiar adjectives, say something about the head noun.

traditional mountain crafts (crafts) an intensive six-month review (review)

a vast computerized data-monitoring system (system) an underground anti-slavery movement (movement)

Third, a good exemplary phrase might provide examples, a description, a parts-whole relationship, a category word or some other context useful for thinking about the word.

a white riverscape of rock and plunge pools (riverscape) a control panel with hundreds of knobs and switches (panel) bicycles, fishing rods, and other sports gear (gear)
the pros and cons of bachelorhood (bachelorhood) fill out a subscription form for a magazine (magazine)

Fourth, the exemplary phrase might provide a related but contrasting term, which I sometimes indicate by versus:

binge drinkers versus light drinkers (drinker) dump bombs versus precision munitions (munitions) retention bonuses versus hiring bonuses (bonus) traditional books versus e-books (book) cotton socks versus wool socks (socks)

Fifth, the exemplary phrase might signal a larger, related issue:

coal mining, funding cuts, and safety concerns (safety) big-city anti-blight programs and abandoned buildings (abandoned) underage drinking and traffic accidents, crime (drinking) airport signage and runway incursions (runway)
the organized tour group and mass travel (tour)

Sixth, a good exemplary phrase might contain related vocabulary in a series:

power outages, water shutdowns and phone disruption (power) fishing boats, tugs and barges (boat) ammunition, body armor and survivalist gear (body) breathing, blood pressure and body temperature (body) book knowledge, wisdom and experience (book)

I particularly like that last one! The best exemplary phrases go beyond merely identifying to suggest a topic that can lead to a discussion. For example, the phrase "farm animals, grazing at midday," presents a pretty picture. But the phrase, "rescuing abandoned and abused farm animals," can lead to discussion. It makes me think of the donkey hospital in Cairo. How should people treat farm animals? What business is if of the government or the police? What constitutes cruelty to animals? Do animals have feelings? These are things I enjoy talking about with my students.

Speaking of animals, whenever I introduce the modal can (ability), I always ask my students, "Can a camel swim?" and then take a short break while the debate rages. I'll never forget the student who pronounced that, whereas it was possible an Egyptian camel could swim, he was quite certain a Saudi one couldn't! I just recently read an article about this in a magazine. Apparently, almost every animal is instinctively able to "dog paddle" and can swim after a fashion for a bit, even a human baby! The only animals that are sure to drown in deep water are apes and giraffes. Giraffes, due to their shape, sink like knives. I have no idea what's up with the apes! When I was a boy, I used to swim a horse across a lake. Bareback. You've got to hang on tight to the horse's mane when it comes out of the water, particularly if the bank is steep.

In western North Carolina, when people talk about racing, they are usually referring to cars, specifically stock cars. In Saudi Arabia, racing might very well refer to camels, the kind that goes on in at the great cultural-heritage festival of Janidriyah ever year in north Riyadh, just a couple mile's walk from Camp Vinnell.

The mind naturally thinks of camel as a thing, a noun. You can ride a camel, a camel has a long neck, a camel has a hump, a camel is an animal, etc.

Yet camel can is used quite productively as a modifier: a camel rider; a camel track; a camel breeding program; a camel saddle, etc.

Almost any noun you can think of can be used as a modifier: pencil (pencil sharpener); chalk (chalkboard); paper (paper clip); room (room number); name (nametag).

In this compilation, uses of the noun as a modifier are provided first under the entry. You will find a phrase like camel track entered under camel and also entered under track. That way, if you are teaching camel, the collocation will be available to you, and you will also find it if you ever have to teach track. Along with plenty of other collocations for track and camel, of course.

a racing camel

Of course, we can modify most words with adjectives, a noun or complex modifiers that can include any part of speech. In this part of the world, a good racing camel can sell for as much as a million dollars.

camels, sheep and goats

English is full of collocations like "bread and butter" and "salt and pepper." I tell my students they are "husband and wife" words, because it's hard not to think of one without the other. The nice thing about these collocations is that they associate related vocabulary in the learner's mental lexicon. All the teacher needs to do to activate these collocations is to consider the nouns he or she will teach that day, attach and before and after the word, and see if anything springs to mind.

(1) camel(s) and ______ (and _____)

(2) _____ and camel (s)

For the first slot, camels, sheep and goats comes to mind. The second slot makes me think of Bedouins and their camels.

Just the other day, I had to teach parts of the body, including muscle, bone and skin. I paused briefly to describe how a victim of famine might be described as skin and bones. I could tell by the way my students looked at me and one another that the juxtaposition of the words struck them.

Once identified and discussed, collocations with and make excellent listening-completion sentences. The teacher begins the sentence, and the students complete it:

Children like to play hide and * Mr. and Mrs. Archer are husband and * Science advances through a process of trial and *
The gap is widening between rich and * Children must learn the difference between right and *

Likely completions are seek, wife, error, poor and wrong.

In this compilation, a collocation like husband and wife appears as an entry under husband and also under wife. In other words, if you look up husband, you will encounter it, and if you look up wife, you will encounter it. In addition, you will find a list of collocations with and / or in Appendix 1.

the eyelashes of the camel

Of is a relationship-signaling word that serves to associate related vocabulary in the learner's mental lexicon. All the teacher needs to do is to consider the nouns he or she will teach that day, attach of before and after the word, and see if anything springs to mind.

(1) _____ of (a) camel

(2) camel of ______

We can talk about the eyelashes, hump and feet of a camel. We can't really go in the other direction and talk about "the camel of….(something)" but with other words its quite possible.

Collocations with of often indicate a parts / whole relationship:

the roof of the house
the mouth of the cave
the trunk of the car
the foot of the mountain
the bank of the river

And of is commonly used with unit nouns:

a loaf of bread
a bushel of apples an act of violence sheets of paper rounds of ammo

Collocations with of can sometimes be restated with or without an apostrophe:

the organizers of the event
the event's organizers event organizers

Once identified and taught, collocations with of make excellent listening-completion sentences. The teacher says the sentence, and the students complete it:

Things are going badly. We are on the brink of *.
You can get business information at the chamber of *
For sacrificing himself for his comrades, he received the Medal of * I bought my wife a bouquet of *
In the military, complaints must go up the chain of * Likely completions are disaster, commerce, honor, flowers and command.

In this compilation, a collocation like bouquet of flowers appears as an entry for bouquet and as an entry for flower. In other words, if you look up bouquet, you will encounter it, and if you look up flower, you will encounter it. In addition, you will find a list of of collocations in Appendix 2.

an easy-to-ride camel

A little word that is often found binding certain modifier collocations together is to. Sometimes to separates two nouns that are the same, or two nouns that are different.

surface-to-surface (missile) surface-to-air (missile)

To can come between an adjective and a verb:

easy-to-understand (lesson)

Or to might separate an adverb / preposition and a noun:

down-to-earth (guy)

Once identified and taught, collocations with to make excellent listening-completion sentences. The teacher says the sentence, and the students complete it:

The streets were crowded this morning. Traffic was bumper to * Will the volcano erupt? I don't know, it's hard to * Do you need to cook this? No, it's ready to *
Is he rich? Yes, he's quite well to *
Is this the latest program? Yes, it's quite up to *

Likely completions are bumper, predict, eat, do, and date.

In this compilation a modifier like up to date has its own entry. In addition, you will be directed to it if you look up up or date. And a selection of collocation with to appears in Appendix 3.

Kashm Al An (the Camel's Nose)

At the National Guard English Language School, all of the classrooms have a view of the Camel's Nose, an unusual rock formation at the end of a long ridge that resembles a camel's nose and which gives the name to this area of north Riyadh. The firing range is out in that direction and sometimes during the course of the lesson the windows of our school rattle from the explosions.

Much language can be created with the apostrophe (the X's Y). All the teacher need do is attach an apostrophe to a noun and see what springs to mind.

a camel's _____

We can talk about a camel's nose, eyelashes, feet, color, size, weight, age, price, pedigree, etc

If you look up father in this compilation, among the entries you will find father's life, father's death, father's relatives, and father's footsteps. I particularly like the last collocation.

Like of, collocations with the apostrophe can express a parts-whole relationship:

the cave's mouth (cave)

an elephant's back (elephant) the computer's keyboard and touchpad (computer) the escalator's steps (escalator)
the river's bank (river)

The last example, the river's bank, could just as well be expressed as the bank of the river or the riverbank.

Once identified and taught, expressions like these make excellent listening-completion sentences. The teacher says the sentence, and the students complete it:

I took a ride on the elephant's *
I fell asleep on the river's * My father was a teacher, and I hope to follow in his *
When you ride an escalator, be sure and hold on to the escalator's *
We are very proud of our company's *

Likely completions are back, bank, footsteps, handrail, and reputation. Variation is to be expected and can be discussed.

In this compilation, a collocation like company's reputation is entered under company and also entered under reputation. In other words, if you are look up company, you will encounter it, and if you look up reputation, you will encounter it.

camels, sheep, goats and / or other / similar livestock

The frame X and other Y is also very useful for categorizing words. How would you fill the following slot?

camels, sheep, goats and other _____

To my mind, possible completions might include livestock or desert livestock.

A frame like this can be used to create excellent listening-completion sentences. The teacher says the sentence, and the students complete it:

muscle spasms, weakness, rapid shallow breathing and other * reduce the public's exposure to lead and other * Mike Tyson, Tiger Woods and other * bicycles, fishing rods, and other * radar, jet planes and other advanced *

Possible completions are symptoms, toxins, sports figures, sports gear, and weapons. Variation is to be expected and can be discussed.

In this compilation, an expression like lead and other toxins would appear under lead and also under toxins. In other words, if you look up lead, you will find it, and if you look up toxin, you will find it.

camels and their care

An interesting variation is the frame X and its / their Y. How would you fill the slot?

camels and their _____ Possible completions include: care, health, keepers, habitat, and importance.

Or how would you complete the following slot?

census data and their _____

One possible answer is use. Other answers might include collection or analysis. Or how about interpretation? All these answers are worthy of being discussed in the classroom. Frames like these, associate vocabulary in the learner's mental lexicon. Or, to put it another way, why on earth teach data but not interpretation?

Again, a frame like this can be used to create excellent listening-completion sentences. The teacher says the sentence, and the students complete it:

nursing aides and their *
the river and its * fitness trainers and their * war and its * sorcerers, witches and their *

Possible completions are high turnover rate, surrounding low-lying area, exercise programs, devastating effects, and magic spells. Variation is to be expected and can be discussed.. For example, we might just as well think about nursing aides with respect to their responsibilities (duties), schedule, etc.

fodder for camels

For is a relationship-signaling word that serves to associate related vocabulary in the learner's mental lexicon. All the teacher needs to do is to consider the nouns he or she will teach that day, attach for before and after the word, and see if anything springs to mind.

(1) camel (s) for ______

(2) _____ for (a) camel

We can talk about fodder, a saddle and pasturage for a camel. Going in the other direction, we can talk about camels for milk, meat and racing.

Sentences with for make excellent listening-completion sentences. You say the sentence, and let the students complete it:

a breeding ground for *
There will be a free health screening for * Everybody should know the risk factors for * She gave him a prescription for * a massive police manhunt for * Student completions will show considerable variety: a breeding ground for viruses / germs / hate; a free health screening for diabetes / blood pressure; risk factors for suicide / cancer / AIDS / stroke; a prescription for tranquilizers / pain pills / Ritalin / sleeping pills; a manhunt for the escaped convicts / the murderer / the criminal. Variation is to be expected and can be discussed.

In this compilation, a phrase like prescription for tranquilizers would appear under prescription and also under tranquilizer. In other words, if you look up prescription, you will encounter it, and if you look up tranquilizer, you will encounter it. A short selection of collocations with for appears in Appendix 4.

a one-hump camel

It was an honor to teach Saudi National Guardsmen, as the National Guard was the first military force to respond to the Iraqi invasion of Saudi Arabia and fought at the Battle of Kafje. In fact, one of my students, Dhafer Al-Asmari, was almost killed there--by friendly fire from an American plane! How's that for a collocation: friendly fire! I spent the war in the Al-Khobar-Dammam-Dhahran area, with the Patriot-Scud battle going on overhead and for a few years after had a recurring nightmare and an exaggerated startle response. Who can forget that one-hundred-hour war?

Nouns are commonly modified by a number. Can you think of ways to fill the following slots with numbers?

a _____ quiz
a _____ limit
a _____ run
a _____ apartment

Most people will come up with phrases such as a 5-minute break, a 50-item quiz, a 2-drink limit, a 6-mile run, and a 2-bedroom apartment. Diligent students will point out the rule for plurals gets broken, and they will just have to get over it.

In this compilation, you will find plenty of number modifiers.

a black camel

Most adjective-noun partnerships the students get in their books, particularly at the lower levels, are contrived and trivial: "That plane is fast, the other one is slow," "That car is old, the other car is new," etc. As usual, the stress is often grammatical: the order of adjectives, adjectives after linking verbs, adjectives versus adverbs, the comparison of adjectives, etc.

In this compilation, you will see more adjectives that are used to categorize words, often in relation to another word or words: a hot shower versus a cold one; a military school versus a civilian one; local, municipal, state, federal (domestic) or international government, etc.

You will also find that many adjectives, like heavy, old, wrong and hot, are not always used in the senses we teach. A heavy drinker or smoker may or not be overweight; my old neighborhood does not refer to its age, but to the fact I used to live there; the wrong crowd may still be able to give the right answer to a math problem; and hopefully you won't get burned if you call a telephone hot line.

Interestingly, adjective-noun collocations sometimes occur in adjective twins or triplets, as the following examples show:

I was in the wrong place at the wrong time
I was in the right place at the right time we're dealing with real people, with real lives, and real unhappiness
I did the wrong thing. Hung with the wrong crowd, made the wrong choices.

a heavily laden camel

I have included adverb + past participle modifiers of the type "dimly lit room," "beautifully written book" and "genetically engineered crops." Of the three examples, the first is the most temporary, creative and descriptive, while the third feels like much the strongest collocation.

Once identified and taught, these constructions make excellent listening-completion sentences. You say the sentence, and the students finish it:

Unprotected sex results in the spread of sexually transmitted *
Poor food and lack of recreation are frequently heard *
We learned about it from a highly placed * How did they find it on the ocean floor? With a remotely operated *

Valium is a widely prescribed *

Likely completions are diseases, complaints, source, submarine, and tranquilizer. Variation is to be expected and can be discussed.

In this compilation, adverbs like dimly and participles like lit are entered alphabetically. The construction will also be found with its head noun: if you look up cockpit, you will encounter dimly lit cockpit.

raise, buy, sell, ride, slaughter, butcher a camel

While I did not enter noun-verb collocations in this work, some noun-verb collocations can be gleaned from the exemplary sentences and phrases. As I have said previously, teaching verbs for nouns is extremely important and must not be overlooked in teaching vocabulary.

going into battle

Consulting this compilation and using our heads, let's consider the word book (although we could just as easily consider the word bomb or business).

A CAMEL RACE. Using book as a modifier, we can talk about: a book advance, the book business, a book buyer, a bookcase, Oprah's book club, a book collector, book critics, a book deal, a book editor, a book fair, book knowledge (versus wisdom and experience), a bookmark, book project, book report, book review, the book room, book royalties, book sales, and bookseller, bookshelf, bookshop, bookstore, and book version (versus the online version).

A RACING CAMEL. As there are different kinds of camels, so there are different kinds of books: address books, advice books, checkbooks, chess books, comic books, condolence books, cookbooks, diet books, guest books, guide books, logbooks, the phone book, photo books, phrase books, record books, reference books, reservations books, rule books, scrapbooks and textbooks.

Getting more complex with the modifiers, we can speak of military-history books, hardback books, nonfiction books, self-help books or best-selling books. How about a must-buy book?

CAMELS, GOATS, AND SHEEP. Books and magazines. Books, magazines and newspapers.

THE EYELASHES OF THE CAMEL. A shelf of books, a library of books, a collection of books, a roomful of books. Going the other way makes me think of a book of poems, a book of essays, a book of lists, the Guinness Book of Records.

AN EASY-TO-RIDE CAMEL. Book to book? No. Cover to cover is what we've looking for here. Or easy to read. Difficult to put down. Hard to understand or grasp.

THE CAMEL'S NOSE. Putting an apostrophe on book, we can talk about the book's title, author and publisher. The book's forward, introduction, table of contents, length. The book's illustrations, organization, theme, message, purpose and value. The book's price. The book's availability and audience.

CAMELS, SHEEP, GOATS AND / OR OTHER / SIMILAR LIVESTOCK. Books, magazines and other library / reading / published materials. Books and other printed media?

CAMELS AND THEIR CARE. Books and their ideas. Books and their authors. Books and their role in culture. Books and their preservation. Books and their audience.

FODDER FOR CAMELS. Books for school (schoolbooks), books for entertainment, books for instruction (instructional books), books for college, books for the coffee table (coffee-table books). Going the other way reminds me you need an audience and a publisher for a book. A shelf for books (a bookshelf). At our school, we have a large storage room for books. Angelo Corva runs it, on top of his regular teaching load, the saint.

A BLACK CAMEL. A good, wonderful, interesting, dull, exciting, thoughtful or confusing book. A long or short book. An expensive or cheap book. Some people buy and sell rare books or used books. Nowadays, we are seeing more e-books (electronic books as opposed to bound books).

A HEAVILY-LADEN CAMEL. A beautifully, clearly or poorly written book, a handsomely designed book, a recently published book, a superbly edited book, a wonderfully illustrated book, a well organized book, a clearly written book, etc.

RAISE, BUY, SELL, RIDE, SLAUGHTER, BUTCHER A CAMEL. Well, obviously, read. But before you can read a book, you will need to buy, borrow or perhaps check it out (from a library). It's not a good idea to steal it. And don't forget, once you start it, you may or may not finish it. And when you finish it, what do you do then? You might discuss it with a friend, for starters. And after that? You might sell it, put it on the bookshelf, lend it to a friend or donate it to the library. I usually give my books away. Otherwise, I just lose them with all the moving I do. Hopefully, nobody will burn or censor a book.

The most natural way to think of verbs is to think in terms of a series: first, acquire a book. Second, read it. Third, dispose of it.

I would just like to take a moment to talk about a category of verbs I call "outcome" verbs. A good example is try. If you try to do something, two things can happen: you succeed, or you fail. If you fail, two things can happen: you can try again, or you can give up. If you try again, two things can happen… It is easy to show these outcomes on the board as branches using arrows. These verbs create instant frames for controlled conversation: "What did you try to do?"

"I tried to climb a mountain." "Did you succeed?" "No, I failed." Did you try again, or did you give up?" "I tried again." "And did you succeed?" "Yes, I did." The important thing in teaching an "outcome" verb like try is associating it in the learner's mental lexicon with succeed, fail, try again, and give up. Or, to put it another way, why on earth teach try and not also teach succeed, fail, try again and give up? How can the user actually use a word if he doesn't know other, related words?

When I teach the word book, I always mention the frame: a book by somebody about something and try to elicit sentences like, "I read a good book by Najib Mafooz about life in Cairo."

Clearly there is a lot of language connected with this one word book. Clearly, all possible collocations could never be listed, much less memorized, acquired and used. And just as clearly, all that is known about a word can't be taught immediately by the busy teacher responsible for covering a certain number of pages every day. And yet, over the course of a program, we teachers do have a chance to reveal to our students the chunks of language that make up our native-speaker competence. All we can do is try, and try again, and never give up! If we can give our students an eye and an ear for language like this, they will start noticing it on their own. And then they won't need us. Which is wonderful, because, unlike us teachers, our students get to return to the normal world, and resume a normal life when they graduate.

A word about concordance programs, text corpora, e-texts and traditional books

Anyone with a computer, a concordance program and access to large bodies of text (text corpora) can create their own list of collocations. There are several problems, however. First, many teachers and most students don't have computers, or access to one. Many places in the world don't have electricity, clean water, security and enough to eat, much less Internet access. Second, the working teacher is busy and has a limited amount of time to prepare. And why should every teacher look up words, when one could do it for all? Third, not all corpora are good for all words. One corpus might provide many hits for a word like government but be completely useless for a word like skateboard, or any collocations relating to board sports, for that matter. Fourth, the trend now is for the owners of large text corpora to make them available only on a pay-per-use basis. Education, like almost everything else everywhere, is business. A beggar has more access to money and support through charity than a teacher has through his or her school, company or professional organization, in spite of the fact that education is perhaps the best way to save people from a life of begging. When it comes to support and encouragement, the working teachers, particularly those unassociated with a university who work for private companies overseas, are like the Vietnam-era marines forced to rummage through the base garbage dump for food and equipment. There it is.

An electronic version of a work like this is absolutely no substitute for a cheaply produced traditional bound version that students and teachers can acquire, carry around and refer to. I hold out hope that a philanthropist or courageous publisher will step up and make printed copies of this work available to all who might find it useful.

I pay my respects to…

I would like to pay my respects to those teachers who have had a special, lasting effect on me, beginning with Oliver "Ollie" Oesch, my Latin and history teacher at West Lafayette High School in Indiana. At Indiana University there were Dr. Jelavich and Dr. Kaplan in the History Department, and Murray Sperber and Scott Saunders in the English Department. Like many teachers, I've been greatly influenced by Michael Lewis and the Lexical Approach, John Sinclair and the Cobuild Dictionary, Beth Levin and her book English Verb Classes and Alternations, and empowered by Michael Barlow's Monoconc concordance program. Of course, my first teachers were my father and mother. I must also pay my respects to Norm Vetter, the most humane teacher I ever met, who died of a heart attack not long after returning home from the Gulf. Semper fi, Norm! I would also like to acknowledge Michael Otier, who got me excited about vocabulary in the first place. And I would like to thank you, the inhabitants of Graham County, Western North Carolina, who were kind enough to accept me while I revised and expanded this work. Your dignity, pride, strength, resilience, old-fashioned values and your respect for individuality, privacy and education were a great source of comfort, strength and encouragement to me.. Ironically, Graham county is one of the places in the U.S. where people know what a feist is. The local hunters use them to hunt bear and boar.

Of course, this compilation owes most to my students, past, present and future, particularly the ones here in Saudi Arabia and the members of the Saudi National Guard. Thanks for your genuine Bedouin hospitality, warmth, affection, encouragement, and camaraderie. Thanks for your interests, enthusiasm, curiosity, unending questions but most of all your trust.

Oh carry my bones to the desolate zones
Where the camels carry their loads.
And bury me high, that I might espy,
Your camps on the sands down below!
And when you pass by this place that I lie,
Please, cry out my name to me!
For, although I'm in bliss, I already miss,
The long trips in your proud company!
